BILL COURTENAY'S FAULT

Virginia Harned, With Norah Gone, Gets First Food Aid From Kind Neighbors.

In the dazzling moonlight that flooded the white house and barn and garage and lawns and gardens belonging to William Courtenay and his wife, Virginia Harned, in Westchester county. near Rye, the notable theatrical couple were taking their usual "Saturday night" stroll shortly after midnight yesterday morning and discussing the weekly week and part of the morrow.

Every Saturday night, it seems, Mrs. Bill Courtenay stroll on their n to assure themselves that all is l at Great Neck, far across the nd; for they can se -from the high ound on which their home is located— a lights in the Great Neck bathrooms Frank Craven, Raymond Hitchcock De Wolf Hopper, Sam Harris and George Cohan on every clear Saturday night. And on the first Saturday night of each month they can also see a light in the hathroom of Morris Gest. Some Satur-day nights they can even see, far to the th at New Rochelle, a light in the broom of Eddie Foy's house.

"To-morrow, my dear," began Bill Courtenay to Mrs. Bill, as he led up diffidently to the subject of the Sunday party in the Courtenay barn. "For to-morrow I have deather." "But Norah has—" began Mrs. Bill, but got no further.

WIVES OF BUILDERS CHRISTEN TWO SHIPS

Steel Cargo Carriers Safely Launched in Newark Bay.

The Cokato and the Panola, stee argo ships, were launched yesterday morning at the Newark Bay shipyard of the Submarine Boat Corporation, Mrs Chester P. Morgan, wife of the superintendent of the way on which the Cokato was built, christened that vessel, while Mrs. George H. Coburn named the Panola, her husband having superintended its construction. Sunday was selected so that the families of the workmen who took part in constructing the ships might view the launching.

At 10 o'clock the hammering beneath the Cokato ceased, evidence that the blocks had all been knocked from under her and the trigger was released. A moment later the big hulk moved and Mrs. Morgan threw a bottle of wine against her prow, at the same time pro-nouncing the words that gave the craft its name. Half an hour later the Panola noved and Mrs. Coburn broke another bottle on her hull.

Both vessels slid down the ways into the water without a sign of a hitch and rested on the bosom of the bay until tugs towed them to the canal at the outh end of the shipyard where they will be equipped with machinery and prepared for sea. During the launching the Submarine Band rendered selections.
